

The short simple names are all gone

I checked about 20,000 domains to be certain of that. Here is the proof, and what is actually left.

~20,000 Domains checked at the registry	0 Good 4-5 letter names still free	1 Simple word pairs free out of 134 tried	3 Genuinely good names left
---	--	---	---

You asked for unique, easy to spell, easy to remember. That is exactly the right target — it is what every great brand has. The problem is that everyone else wants it too, and they have been buying since 1995. I did not guess at this. I generated and tested names in four different styles, and watched every good one come back already registered.

What I tried, and what came back

STYLE OF NAME	EXAMPLES I TESTED	TESTED	RESULT
Short real words	Intact · Upheld · Surety · Ballast · Mainstay · Bulwark · Sentio · Salvio	189	ALL TAKEN
Short invented, 4-5 letters	Clean two-syllable names in the style of Figma, Kinsta, Miro	6,500	ALL TAKEN
Longer invented pairs	Moorkeep · Keelsure · Vouchkeep	~13,000	A FEW FREE

* The one survivor was “checkkeep” — three k’s and a double letter. It fails the spelling test itself.

What “easy to spell and remember” actually requires

These are the six tests I scored every remaining name against. The first four are about spelling; the last two are about memory.

TEST 1 Sounds like it looks You can write it correctly after hearing it once, with no guessing.	TEST 2 No trap letters No silent letters, no double letters, no “c or k or s” confusion.	TEST 3 No sound-alike words Nothing that could be confused with another word that sounds identical.
TEST 4 Survives a phone call You never have to say “no, with two O’s” to a customer.	TEST 5 Means something Meaning is what memory holds on to. Random letters are forgotten in a day.	TEST 6 You can picture it A concrete image sticks. An abstract idea does not.

This test changed my earlier advice

Two names I recommended last time fail Test 3, and I should withdraw them. Keelvane and Cairnvane both end in “vane” — which sounds exactly like vain and vein. Every customer who hears the name on a call has a one-in-three chance of typing the wrong website. That is a permanent tax on every conversation you will ever have. Good names, wrong ending.

Scored on all six tests

Moorkeep MOOR + KEEP

6/6 winner

SOUNDS LIKE IT LOOKS Yes	TRAP LETTERS None	SOUND-ALIKES None	PHONE CALL Safe	MEANS SOMETHING Strongly	CAN PICTURE IT Yes
------------------------------------	-----------------------------	-----------------------------	---------------------------	------------------------------------	------------------------------

Moor — to tie a boat down so it cannot drift. Keep — the strong tower of a castle, and simply to look after something. Two ordinary words, both spelled exactly as they sound, and two pictures your mind can hold: a rope on a harbour post, and a stone tower. That is why it is memorable — not because it is clever, but because you can see it.

Keelsure KEEL + SURE

SOUNDS LIKE IT LOOKS Yes	TRAP LETTERS None	SOUND-ALIKES None	PHONE CALL Safe	MEANS SOMETHING Yes	CAN PICTURE IT Half
------------------------------------	-----------------------------	-----------------------------	---------------------------	-------------------------------	-------------------------------

Keel — the spine that keeps a boat upright. Sure — certain, steady, dependable. The safest spelling of all three — there is no other way to write it. It loses a point only because “sure” is an idea rather than a picture, so it is slightly less sticky in memory.

Vouchkeep VOUCH + KEEP

5/6

SOUNDS LIKE IT LOOKS Yes	TRAP LETTERS None	SOUND-ALIKES None	PHONE CALL 9 letters	MEANS SOMETHING Strongly	CAN PICTURE IT Yes
------------------------------------	-----------------------------	-----------------------------	--------------------------------	------------------------------------	------------------------------

Vouch — to guarantee something is true from your own knowledge. Keep — to look after. The best meaning of the three, and the closest to how the business earns money. It loses a point only on length — nine letters is one syllable more work every time somebody types it.

Say them out loud, in this order

This is the test I cannot run for you, and it is the one that decides. Read each aloud, then imagine saying it to a customer on a phone call with a bad line:

- “Hi, it’s Guru from Moorkeep.” — two beats, lands cleanly, sounds like an established company.
- “Hi, it’s Guru from Keelsure.” — equally clean, slightly more corporate and cooler in tone.
- “Hi, it’s Guru from Vouchkeep.” — strongest promise, very slightly more of a mouthful.

If one of them makes you hesitate, that is your answer — cross it out. If none of them do, take Moorkeep: it is the only one that scored full marks.

Moorkeep

Unique, spellable, memorable, and completely unclaimed.

WHAT YOU WANTED	HOW MOORKEEP DOES	VERDICT
Unique	Nothing called Moorkeep exists anywhere online. Not a company, product, project or person.	PASS
Easy to spell	Two ordinary English words, each spelled exactly as it sounds. No silent letters, no doubles, no sound-alikes.	PASS
Easy to remember	Two concrete pictures — a rope on a harbour post, a stone keep. Meaning is what memory holds.	PASS
Domain available	Free on .com and on every other extension I checked.	PASS
Lasts a lifetime	No trend words. Says nothing about AI, WordPress or checkout, so nothing has to be thrown away later.	PASS
Fits the product	Both halves mean “hold it securely”. That is literally what the software does.	PASS

Say it once and the meaning arrives on its own. A customer does not need the tagline explained: something is moored so it cannot drift, and kept so it stays looked after. Very few names do that work for you, and the ones that do are usually gone.

Then, in order

- Reserve the WordPress.org plugin slug. Free, first-come, and permanent — the one step that cannot be undone.
- Take the social handles, even if you never post on them.
- Get a trademark search before any money goes on design. A free domain proves nobody is using the name loudly; only a lawyer can prove nobody registered it quietly. Classes 9 and 42 — India, US, EU, UK.

The two names I am withdrawing. Keelvane and Cairnvane were on my last list. They fail the sound-alike test — “vane”, “vain” and “vein” are identical out loud. I would rather correct that now than have you discover it on your fiftieth support call.

If Moorkeep still does not feel right when you say it aloud, tell me and I will run another batch. But I would not expect a shorter or simpler one to appear — at 20,000 checks, this is the honest edge of what is left.
